DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over admitted prior art Japanese Patent JP404372057, Takemura, in view of Jovicic et al. U.S. Patent No. 5,855,007.

3. As per claim 1, Takemura disclose:

a display device; a display control means for controlling a display; input operation on display device, inputting destination address for transaction record (see abstract and fig. 1).

Takemura does not specifically disclose selectable as to whether the transaction record is to be transmitted to the destination electronic mail address and whether the transaction record is to be issued in form of a sheet. Jovicic et al. (Jovicic) teaches selectable as to whether the coupon record is to be transmitted to the destination mail address and whether the record is to be issued in form of a sheet (see col. 8 lines 10-35 and fig. 1). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of applicant's invention to modify Takemura's invention by connecting to the electronic mail communication network which is readily available communication system.

4. As per claims 2, 5 and 6, inputting in the display device a number of transaction records including a new and past transaction records is inherent to Takemura's invention of transmitting the monthly or up to the date bank statement.

5. As per claims 3 and 4, Takemura disclose:

a display device; display control means; input means for performing an input operation in accordance with a display and control means for communicating with the host computer (see fig. 1); displaying transaction indications including a payment indication, and registering facsimile and transmitting the address via the communication line to the host computer so that the address is registered, and selectable through the input means to whether the transaction record is to be transmitted to the registered facsimile address or an other than the one registered one, and inputting the new destination address for the transaction record (see abstract and fig. 1).

Takemura does not disclose inputting electronic mail address through the input means indicative of a matter that the electronic mail address is able to be registered, and selectable through the input device whether the transaction record is to be transmitted to the registered electronic mail address or an electronic mail address other than the registered electronic mail and whether the record is to be issued in form of a sheet is disclosed in Jovicic (see col. 8 lines 10-35 and fig. 1). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of applicant's invention to modify Takemura's invention by connecting to the electronic mail communication network which is readily available communication system.
